

Mari Swa:

Hello, my friends! Thank you for being here with me again. I hope you are happy and well today. I send you all a big hug. I am Mari. This information can be seen as science fiction or as the viewer sees best and I post it for entertainment purposes only. Still, I take my information very seriously and for whoever has eyes to see.

It is advisable to see my last two videos to comprehend this one better. The first thing to bear in mind to understand this video is that time as such is not something that can exist independently from the consciousness that is generating it as a perception. Time does not exist, or only as an illusion, and as the result of the very act of being conscious and aware.

In the last two videos I published, I explained the concept of hexa-dimensional space time, which is three dimensions in space and three dimensions in time. This model, which is used by interstellar cultures, is very good at explaining why there cannot be any time paradoxes as such, and also how time works in general, but it is only a model, and it does not mean that time is something other than a perception. But then again, so is space. So, ultimately, all time and space, be it in the traditional four-dimensional time space model used on Earth, or in the hexa-dimensional or six-dimensional model used by interstellar cultures, are nothing other than perceptions and tricks of mind and consciousness, designed to give a soul with a strong connection to Source an experience based on limits and on the perception of being finite.

I will approach the reason why there is no real history as such from a more metaphysical point of view first. If time is not something independent of who is perceiving it as the result of their mere act of being aware, then there cannot be a time frame, set duration or a time sequence outside the awareness of who is generating it as a perception. The reason why there is a history or past is because of three interrelated things:

- because we have a memory of what we experienced before the now
- because we live the consequences of past actions; ours and of others, and
- because we are told there is one.

We think that there was a past, which is a group of situations that once occurred, because we assume that the universe and its time work as we perceive it ourselves, and yes, from our particular point of attention, from our point of view, it does work as we perceive it, but then again, that is only perception and it does change from subject to subject, therefore it is not a unified quality or attribute of the universe. It is only when a like-minded group of points of attention, I mean individuals, hold perception agreements, when something based on perception becomes collectively accepted as a reality, but it will not be a universal one.

Everything that exists holds a consciousness one way or another. Even a rock or a grain of sand hold some kind of primitive awareness, and are also points of attention of Source, or else they wouldn't even exist. But here for my point, I am only referring to the points of attention of consciousness we consider to be people.

If there is no one to perceive the duration of time, then there cannot be any time as such. Therefore, the concepts used on Earth which use time frames calculated in thousands or in millions of years make no real sense, and they become only an abstract calculation accepted as an agreement by a group of people who think of themselves as scientists, but only because their culture has agreed to license them for that task.

They may take radioactive decay or astronomical calculations as a reference for their time frame of events, but then again, their conclusions will only be the result of their own perception agreements and the conclusions they arrived at beforehand. And those perception agreements are based on what they call "science" and the "scientific method", which is heavily controlled by the powers at be, and this is a very important point to remember here.

People on Earth assume that the past happened as they are told in their history books, because they have been conditioned and trained to believe in authority figures, and whoever wrote those books, as well as those who push them as real history, are to them authority figures. At least on Earth, if there is no one to remember the past firsthand, then it is easy to impose a false narrative, a false history, which is designed to control the perception of the people. If there is no one left today to perceive firsthand the duration of a decade in the 1700s, people living now only assume that it should be as they perceive a decade now.

All this means that the controllers of Earth can simply wipe out all the historical records of all the events which have occurred, and simply make up a false narrative to suit their population control needs. And, all the evidence we have indicates that this is exactly what is happening on Earth.

All valuable historical evidence, be it in the form of written text, archaeological places or buildings with historical value, as well as artifacts of all kinds, are being expunged from the public, making them unavailable for non-Cabal sponsored researches and for the general public. And this is not new, as it has been going on for a very long time, as the destruction of the Alexandria library testifies.

If there is no one left to remember the past, there no longer can be a fixed time frame, as the duration of time, and time as such, are only perceptions derived from the mind. Erase a people's history and you can do whatever you want with them, as they lack a concrete identity, and without one, people become vulnerable and insecure, easy prey to whoever makes up one for them, by implanting ideas in their minds, which make them easily exploitable. This is the main purpose of all resets on Earth, because if they erase the collective real past, they can impose on them whatever false narrative which suits the needs of the ones in power.

All events which happened before the group of people who are alive now on Earth cannot be placed in a time frame which is congruent by itself, as all those events only exist in historical records which are heavily manipulated, at best. Although most of them are completely fabricated. My point is that if there is no one to generate the perception of time and its duration, then the only way to assume any kind of chronology would be based on historical documents and records, and whoever controls them, controls the perception of time of the past and its sequence, and this is the case with Earth.

As I explained with the hexa-dimensional space-time model, there is no fixed place in the past which can be observed from the future. We can never go back to the exact same moment and location of any historical event, as time would have also moved in the other two of its three dimensions, with this always creating an alternative version of such a historical moment. So, it is not as simple as just jumping into our time-jumping starship and go visit some historical moment and then jumping back here to the now and publishing our findings on this YouTube channel, or wherever.

Yet, with the limited observations coming from time-jumping starships who have visited Earth's past, and also connecting the dots with the information that is readily available to the greater public on Earth, especially in recent years, we can come to certain conclusions.

There definitely was a great global reset some time in the first half of the 19th century. We have concluded that there was an advanced global civilization before that time, which many researchers on Earth call Tartaria, although we see it differently, because we have concluded that Tartaria was a powerful nation or region which was based in what is now central Russia, towards the south part of Siberia, and which extended all to near the way to present day Moscow to the west. And to the east it may have gone as far as today's Alaska and the Yukon territory. To the south it may have gone as far as central China and with the Himalayan mountains, as some kind of geographical frontier. And to the north with the pole as a boundary, connecting with the territory of Hyperborea.

Where we differ with most Tartaria researchers is that we do not think it was the name of a global civilization, as it was only the name for this region specifically, although its influence was global; the same way as modern society and culture on Earth is also global, yet it does not bear one definitive name.

One of the clues to this is the proliferation of very elaborate and very similar architecture all over the world, which is attributed to mid 19th century construction. How far back in time did Tartaria and its global influence existed on Earth is unknown, but our best data indicates that it coexisted with the so-called "Middle Ages" in Europe in a way where, when the Tartarians were flourishing, in Europe they were under the retrograde repression of the Catholic church in Rome.

Our evidence indicates that classic Rome and Greece flourished at the end of the Egyptian empire and then transitioned right into the higher part of the so-called "Middle Ages" and the Renaissance, which by its very name indicates the resurgence of another society after the latest reset, which would be the so-called "fall of Rome". Although we know that Rome did not fall, as it simply transitioned into today's Vatican-controlled structure. And where the greater part of the Middle Ages simply did not exist as such.

We have compelling and extensive evidence that indicates that events which took place in any period, but especially in the lower part of the Middle Ages, were either made up as flat manipulative lies, or were set in a different sequence and chronology, as to give the perception of a much greater length in time. In other words, they stretched the events so they would fill up their false chronology/sequence of events.

So it looks like Egypt was reset into the greater Roman empire, which then was reset into a greater global culture, which included Tartaria as a cultural power-point in it, and which in turn was reset into modern-day society at some time at the beginning of the 19th century.

The reset points we see are the fall of Egypt, with the burning of the Alexandria library, which was used to confiscate and erase the past, as it was the greatest document-holding place outside Rome itself. This moment includes the fall of Cleopatra, as the last Egyptian queen, and her handling of Egypt to the Cabal in Rome. Then the Roman empire would transition into the Middle Age concept of the Vatican controlling everything where the pope essentially is the Caesar but with another name, which in turn coexisted and transitioned into the greater global-wide culture, which included Tartaria.

And then when Tartaria and its global inhabitants became too knowledgeable and wise, it was reset and destroyed at the point of the Napoleonic wars and their struggle against Russia, and also during the period of the so-called industrial revolution. It is also here where the two greatest wars of the 20th century were also used to erase the memory of such a vast and rich global society, by using the systematic bombing of historical cities in Europe.

As you can notice, I'm only giving vague dates as a reference, because time as such cannot be calculated outside the time frame of the perception of whoever is experiencing it. This subject will continue.

Thank you for watching my video, and for liking, sharing and subscribing! I appreciate it a lot, and I hope to see you here next time. Take care.

With much love.
